An editor died and slowly wended his way to where he supposed a war in reception awaited him. The devil met him and spelling that the printer has got off in the paper. The paper has gone for one dollar, and alas! the dollar has failed to come in. The printer has bedeviled thee for wages when thou hadn't a farthing to thy name. People have taken the paper without paying for it, and cursed thee for not getting out a better sheet. Thou hast been called a dead beat by all the railroad conductors when thou hast shown thy annual pass to their envious gaze. All these wrongs thou hast borne in silence. Thou shalt not enter here.' And as the editor turned and walked away, Satan muttered: "Heaven is his home, and besides if I let him in here he would have been dunning his delinquent subscribers and thus creating disgord in my kingdom."

That when he gets his automobile, there maybe another quarrel That he was pulled out of bed and-they saw something.

That the hesitation of story teller lends interest to the game of mirth and admits of a great deal which would otherwise appear blunt.

That he talks to one and looks at the other, but that look coun for more than talk.

That he was having a good time to himself at the dance.

That a chechaco is better liked than an old timer. The fact is she wants something fresh.
